New PMs, nascent dovish developments

Free to View
Economics - Europe

Survey indicators point to a looming recession in the eurozone and the UK as tighter monetary conditions feed through to the economy in spite of cost pressures for firms starting to abate and gas prices having fallen a long way. For now, though, we do not expect a dovish pivot by the ECB, but a pause is possible as recession starts to bite.

Fabio Balboni
 Senior Economist
 HSBC Bank plc

A recession is coming (if it isn't there already)

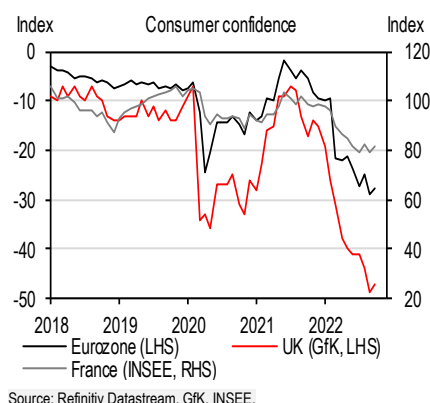

1. The eurozone PMIs fell deeper into contractionary territory in October...

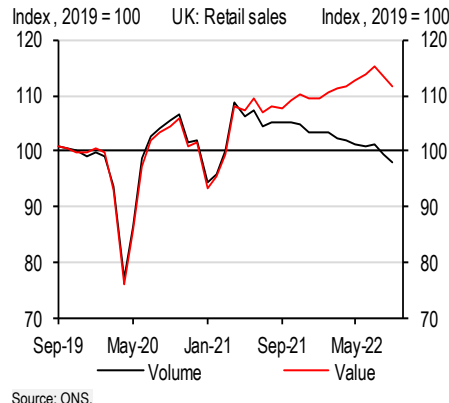

2. ...even though the labour market continues to show some resilience

3. Consumer confidence edged up in October but remains very low, particularly in the UK

4. The real income squeeze is particularly evident when looking at retail sales in the UK
